Alan,
As discussed, attached please find the some background regarding the Prime Minister and his visit to the United States.

Should any of the Vice President's foreign policy or security advisors have some time to meet with Prime Minister Mohamed while he is in DC on Monday or Tuesday of next week, please let me know -- we would do whatever was possible to accommodate their schedule.

Thanks again for your time and consideration.

Warmest regards,
Chris

Somalia – Establishing long term institutional and political stability

The current situation in Somalia, while fraught with danger and uncertainty, also offers a significant opportunity for reducing the terrorist threat emanating from the country, more effectively fighting piracy plaguing international shipping off its coast, and establishing basic democratic institutions and values there.

The new government of recently appointed Prime Minister Mohamed Abdullahi Mohamed has made considerable progress on a number of these challenging fronts. The Prime Minister brings a unique background and skills to his position. He is a member of the Somali Diaspora whose own life has been shaped by the tragic, protracted war in his native country. After working in various Somali diplomatic positions as a young man, Mohamed was forced to leave Somalia by the chaos there to seek security and freedom for his family in the United States. He received his higher education here and established a distinguished career in local and state government. He became a model US Citizen.

While fully inculcated in American democratic values Mohamed retained a devotion to his homeland that led him to return to Somalia in November 2010 to assume the position of Prime Minister there. In that capacity he is well positioned to help build a relatively stable nation state there while also being mindful of the legitimate interests of the United States in helping secure Somalia from the twin evils of terrorism and piracy.

The questions US policymakers must face are clear: do we want to help a government that is sympathetic to US security concerns, that is headed by a PM who understands and appreciates American values, who is making progress against Al Qaeda-linked Al Shabab, and who has established a more credible, effective, and honest government in Mogadishu than it has perhaps ever had.

If the answer to these questions is yes, then the following Somali Roadmap to Peace is offered:

- The Somali PM is committed to meeting US objections to simply extending the transitional government for another three years. Instead he proposes a one year Interim Government that will meet a clear timetable with measurable benchmarks toward democratic elections and a more inclusive political system.
- The Interim Government will call for a Constituent Assembly bringing together all the various tribal and political elements in the country to devise a Constitution and electoral process leading to the creation of a workable parliamentary structure.
- This inclusive and transparent political process will aim to create a parliament that is broadly representative of the Somali nation but of manageable size.
- A schedule of parliamentary elections will be set for one year from the termination of the current transitional government in August 2011.
- The new Parliament will be in place by 2012 to select a new President, who will appoint a new PM thereafter.

Reforms

In its first 50 days in office, members of the Independent Constitutional Commission were appointed to engage Somali constitutional lawyers, religious scholars and experts in Somali culture over the nation's upcoming new constitution, a key part of the government's Transitional Federal Tasks.

To improve transparency, Cabinet ministers were required to fully disclose their assets and signed a code of ethics. An Anti-Corruption Commission with the power to carry out formal investigations and to review government decisions and protocols was established so as to more closely monitor all activities by public officials. A budget outlining 2011's federal expenditures was also put before and approved by members of parliament, with the payment of civil service employees prioritized. In addition, a full audit of government property and vehicles is being put into place.

Personal life

Mohamed was born in Mogadishu Somalia in 1962, and holds both Somali and American citizenship. He is married to Zeinab Moallim, with whom he has four children; two sons and two daughters, aged 7 to 19.

Education

Mohamed was educated in the United States at the State University of New York at Buffalo. In 1993, he completed a Bachelor's Degree in history. In 2009 he received a Master's Degree in Political Science (American Studies). His dissertation was titled: "U.S. Strategic Interest in Somalia: From the Cold War Era to the War on Terror."

Mohamed Abdullahi Mohamed

On October 14, 2010, Mohamed Abdullahi Mohamed was appointed the new Prime Minister of Somalia by the country's President. The Somali Parliament overwhelmingly approved Mohamed's appointment on October 31, 2010. 297 of the 392 Members of Parliament endorsed the selection, 92 MPs voted against, and 3 abstained.

Political analysts who have weighed in on the selection have generally expressed optimism in Mohamed's prospects of fulfilling his duties as Prime Minister in the face of an obstinate insurgency in the southern part of the country. Factors cited include Mohamed's background in the Somali Diaspora; his lack of political baggage; his diplomatic and administrative experience; his commitment to democratic principles; his relatively young age; and the fresh perspective he brings to his office by which he aims to generate greater public support for the government among Somalia's beleaguered people.

United Nations General Ban Ki-Moon personally congratulated Mohamed on his new appointment, and commended the Somali leadership for having reached a consensus on procedural arrangements that facilitated a transparent and consultative confirmation of the Premier. The African Union also welcomed the new Prime Minister and re-affirmed the AU's support for the Somali government.

On November 1, 2010, Mohamed was sworn into office at a ceremony held in the presidential residence, Villa Somalia.

On November 12, 2010, Mohamed named a new Cabinet. He noted that "the Somali people and the international community were waiting for a competent and credible Somali cabinet, and I am happy to appoint this lean, capable cabinet." The ministerial positions were significantly reduced in number, with only 18 administrative posts versus the previous government's bloated 39 positions. Only two Ministers from the previous Cabinet were reappointed. The remaining ministerial positions were largely assigned to technocrats new to the Somali political arena.

War on Terror and Piracy

Since taking office Prime Minister Mohamed has concentrated on building the basic institutions of government and "fighting a two-front war against terrorism and piracy." The Al Shabab terrorist organization, with its close links to Al Qaeda, has been targeted with greater urgency and military effectiveness. In recent weeks, significant progress has been made on the ground in Somalia against Al Shabab by the new government and the allied African Union Mission for Somalia (AMISOM), securing greater government control of the Capital Mogadishu and gaining territory on a number of fronts across the country. With almost a thousand newly-trained government troops on the way, set to be augmented by an additional 4000 AMISOM soldiers, the pace of territorial gains is expected to accelerate.
